Bennybeg Craig is a spectacular south facing cliff. The dyke, made of Quartz-Dolerite, is in frequent use by climbers who are clearly visible to users of the path. The path then passes through farmland to reach Bennybeg Pond where there is a seat.

The next part of the route is slightly undulating beside the pond, where birds such as mute swans and mallards may be seen. There is a table just off the path which is suitable for wheelchair users, and a sloping path down to a viewing platform beside the water.

The viewing platform gives excellent views up and down Bennybeg Pond. It is now only 500 metres back to the car park.
